I recently graduated from CMU with a PhD in machine learning. My research focuses on methods that can assist our understanding of complex machine learning models, and their application to useful downstream tasks involving human users. Methods include efficient decomposition of neural network predictions, algorithmic fairness assessments; applications include dataset debugging, spurious correlation detection, and assisting human users in document matching. Primarily focused on deep learning models applied to text and image data, the approaches studied include model-agnostic perspectives that can be extended to different data modalities.
